Myopathy with rimmed vacuoles (M(2)V), a dominantly inherited myopathy with slow progressive clinical course, is typically associated with the absence of cytochrome c oxidase activity in muscle fibers. To investigate the genetic basis of this disease, we performed a detailed molecular genetic analysis on a Chinese family with M(2)V, in which the disease was transmitted by the maternal line. We have shown that the disease was caused by mutation of the D-tyrosyl-tRNA synthetase (D-TyrRS) gene. In this study, we identified two novel mutations in the gene in the proband and two of her asymptomatic parents, involving the complete loss of activity and the substitution of aromatic amino acid by asparagine at position 193 and phenylalanine at position 390. The mutations segregated with the disease status in the family. The pathogenicity of these mutations was further confirmed by functional studies. Our data suggest that the M(2)V should be considered in the differential diagnosis of muscle disease in the Chinese population.Q: jquery pagination links stopped working (plain javascript) I've been busy with another annoying problem..
