But Matt Flynn's comments last week about the right shoulder injury being worse than the left shoulder injury weren't exactly encouraging. And while the feeling is more positive this week, Aaron Rodgers again will have to take a step back in his rehab from the left shoulder injury that has caused him to miss the first three games of the season. Still, if he's ready to throw at the end of the week and he's able to throw, coach Mike McCarthy likes the matchup against the Bears in Week 6. "That matchup is going to be interesting," he said Tuesday. "I think we'll see if we can get the ball to him if he's healthy. That's always been our philosophy. That's why we bring him back at the end of the year because we believe that he can still play at a high level and can do a lot of damage for us if he's in the game." After Packers starting safety M.D. Jennings left Monday's practice with a back injury, it appeared that Davon House was in line to start at free safety against Chicago. House is one of the players having an impressive first year with the Packers, having started the last six games. But there's no guarantees, and House said that "if they tell me I'm going to start, I'll be ready." While he said he has felt the same about his back injury that House has felt about his shoulder, both have taken steps forward this week. "I feel a little better," House said. "I'm going to
