Version.class RemoveVisibilityStorageErrorIfActive United States v. Sylvester Ernest United States v. Ernest Sylvester Sylvester, No. 13 CR 30071 (S.D. N.Y. Dec. 11, 2013), is an unpublished decision of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, which examined the question of whether a criminal conviction of possession of a firearm by a felon is a "violent felony" conviction for purposes of the Armed Career Criminal Act (ACCA). The court concluded that it is. The court determined that the defendant's prior conviction constituted a "violent felony" under ACCA because it was a crime that has as an element the use of physical force against another person, or the threatened use of physical force against another person, and because the defendant did not come within an exclusionary clause permitting the use of a violent felony conviction as a predicate conviction if the defendant had been convicted of a crime under state law other than a "violent felony" crime. The court ruled that state law offenses that are not violent felony crimes under ACCA, as defined by 18 U.S.C. § 924(e)(2)(B), such as burglary or drug crimes, may nevertheless be used to 3ef4e8ef8d
