* Image formats. The general purpose file format of Photoshop is called PSD. PSD files require less space than other formats. For example, the latest version of Photoshop can open a simple 8-bit JPEG file as a PSD file. However, Photoshop will give a warning about unsupported file types. * Paths. Paths are like vectors, meaning a path is a series of lines or shapes. These lines are often used to illustrate images or add perspective to an image. A path is often used to create an outline or mask of an object, which you can then work on further with the Pen tool. You can view what a path looks like by making it into a graphic image. * Size. The file size for a PSD file can vary, depending on the complexity of the image. Photoshop is able to resize images, so if you create an image of a certain size and then change its dimensions later, your file will grow. PSD files are created with CMYK so their size may grow up to 3 MB each. * Scales. Photoshop can scale images up or down. If you're working with an image that's too big, and you want to edit the file without having to resize the whole image, you can scale it. The ability to scale images is really helpful. Often times when you're working on an image of a certain size and then your computer or device automatically resizes it and you have to play catchup with other tasks, that can be frustrating and time-consuming. PSD stands for Photoshop document. The file size can be huge, so you can try and reduce the file size by reducing the size of certain images, such as background and foreground images. * Layouts. Photoshop has a standard file layout for documents. If you have a folder full of different PSDs, you probably have some standard pages in there that you like to use. Photoshop makes it easy to save a file as a layout or template. To save a file with a layout, right-click on the file and choose Save As. To import a template into a Photoshop document, choose File > New > From Folder. Then find the appropriate folder in the menu and choose Open. * Photoshop programs. It's not uncommon to use Photoshop on multiple computers, so you'll want to make sure it saves frequently, maybe twice a day if you're sharing a computer with someone. When you save a file, Photoshop will prompt you to

Armed with its 38-0 SEC record, lofty expectation and the legendary SEC East champion label, the Florida Gators are favored to win their first BCS Championship game in four seasons. And for the teams standing in their way, Florida's invite and invite-embrace have become constant reminders of the towering task at hand. Although these eight teams hold a combined record of 11-2, the Florida Gators have outscored their opposition, 649-183, over the last four weeks. The last three have been against Western Kentucky, Nebraska and Missouri. While the Buckeyes and the Aggies have played much better, the Gators run over the two teams by a combined 214-63. The Gators average more than 14 points per contest. But Florida faces its stiffest challenge of the season when the Gators host the Cal Bears this weekend. If they hope to get their first trip to the BCS title game, the Gators will have to play very well and very well-rested. The Gators have not had to play a highly-confident team like Cal in a while. And in their last four games, the Gators have had to confront an inexperienced and very physical group of teams: a two-point loss at Kentucky, a 41-point beatdown at Nebraska, a 32-point shellacking at Missouri and a 30-point whipping at Western Kentucky. The Hurricanes and Tigers each score more than 400 points per game, but those offenses have been on the field for a combined total of 72 minutes with the Gators offense and defense on the field for at least 80. Toughest Game of the Season The game is the toughest matchup of the season for the Gators. The Gators are coming off a week where they were at home for the first time in 11 games. They also had a bye week, and were able to have a few extra days of preparation for the Cal Bears. While it is easy to claim that the No. 1 team in the nation should just go out and beat up on the weaker teams, the Gators cannot go out like that and expect to pull off the upset. The Gators have lost by a combined score of 121-16 over their last four opponents — their worst start in 31 years. Perry's Handling of Past Success Florida quarterback John Brantley has stepped up in a big way over the last four games, earning the praise of many experts and players and having the confidence of his
