By Rick Jervis The Washington Post The Ebola outbreak in West Africa has exploded since late 2013, with a past peak of 2,908 confirmed and probable cases and 1,368 deaths recorded in March this year. That was the highest number of cases and deaths since the disease re-emerged in 1976, when there were about 200,000 cases and 50,000 deaths. The World Health Organization said Thursday that Ebola cases were on the rise in Guinea, Liberia, Nigeria, Senegal and Sierra Leone. That brings the total number of cases reported or confirmed in the four countries to at least 4,892. The outbreak has exacted a heavy toll in terms of lives lost and disease-related pain and suffering. In the past, the death rate in cases of Ebola hemorrhagic fever was about 60 percent. But unlike the case with the AIDS epidemic, the world has made enormous strides in fighting against the disease. The WHO's Ebola outbreak dashboard indicates that the fatality rate at this point is about 42 percent. The international community stepped up to the plate with the outbreak to stave off further outbreaks and the possibility of the disease traveling outside of the affected areas. After the 2009 "swine flu" outbreak in Mexico and North America, WHO sent teams in to Sierra Leone to analyze their disease surveillance, and also launched a $10 million emergency fund to combat the outbreak. "The epidemic in West Africa right now is the largest in history and the biggest challenge in terms of response," said Dr. Paul Hunter, director of the emerging diseases lab at the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. "It's a major challenge. When they are just gathering information, it's hard." By March 15, there were 55,852 laboratory-confirmed cases of Ebola, but that number is expected to increase because not all cases are tested, according to the WHO. The U.S. government has denied an Ebola epidemic exists in the United States. Despite that statement, the nation is preparing for a possible outbreak. Last month, Texas Gov. Rick Perry activated the Texas National Guard to assist local medical professionals with the Ebola response, as Ebola cases have increased in Dallas, the state's second-largest city. On Wednesday, U.S. Secretary of Health and Human Services, Sylvia Mathews Burwell, said there
