The company's flagship product is called Audials One, and aims to be the ultimate media recording and conversion software for Windows users. To be more precise, it basically records anything that can be played on your computer: music, movies, TV series, live TV content, as well as content from popular music and video streaming services such as Spotify, Amazon Music, Deezer, Netflix, Amazon Video, Hulu, and many more. The music recording part At first, the app might seem a bit intimidating for newcomers. Even though the app boasts an impressive array of features, the app can be split into two main parts: the features for music recording, and those for video recording. Everything you need can be found in the app's sidebar. In the music department, there are four entries: Music, Radio, Music Streaming, and Playlists. In the Music section, you can explore music lists, charts, compilations, artists, or even search for artists yourself. To record a tune, simply click the record icon to save a track to your computer. Sources include YouTube, Spotify, Deezer, and other renowned music streaming sites. You can also record multiple songs at once. The Radio section displays all the radio stations sorted either by country or by genre. It's worth noting that the app also offers options to import and export playlists to and from Spotify and YouTube. You can also schedule recordings, as well as record music at various quality levels (such as Ultra HD, HiFi, or Master). You also get to choose to add covers and lyrics to songs. At this point, the app supports somewhere around 100,000 Radio stations and around 350,000 podcasts. Video recording is done right As mentioned before, Audials One supports video recordings as well. Record the Internet to your PC or Mac in H.265 or H.264 Media recording is a breeze with Audials One. Whether you're recording music, TV, live TV or streaming content, it's easy to record the things that matter most. With Audials One, capturing media content has never been so easy and so simple. In the recording section, you'll find four options: Audio, Video, Music, and Playlists. Audio You have the option to record streaming media through your chosen streaming service (Deezer, Youtube, etc.), but you also have options to record music streaming from any of your local music sources. Audials One can select the output format and also record multiple media files at the same time. 1. What are the difference between audio recording and streaming audio? Audio recording gives you the ability to record exactly the streaming content you want to capture. You can even choose to record the entire audio stream. Recording the audio only stream means that only the sound is captured. 2. How can I record a single source? You can select the radio, television, YouTube, etc. audio streams on any source that allows this. Multiple sources can be selected, and all the streams can be recorded at the same time. 3. Can I record my computer audio? Yes, you can record your computer audio, including your microphone. 4. What is the recommended computer format? You can select the output format directly. Different video and audio codecs provide optimal audio quality and compression, including H.264 and H.265. 5. Can I record via a USB adapter? Audio recording only. 6. Can I record on the fly? You don't need to download anything; you can just select the input. Video If your source gives you an option to "start recording", you can record the media content as soon as you choose the source. You can record, pause, and stop as many times as you want. You can pause at any time, even when the stream is fully recorded. 1. I don't need to download anything; how can I record on the fly? 2. How can I record the source without downloading anything? Select the source you want to record from, and select the record to option. After you've chosen the source, you'll be asked if you want to start recording. 3. What video quality can I record? Video recording quality depends on the source you choose.
