Photoshop Elements has a limited set of editing features, along with some professional features. This makes it suitable for everyday tasks, such as editing images, removing blemishes and correcting photos. In this Photoshop Elements tutorial, you will learn how to create a fun Photoshop filter effect and apply it to an image. Requirements You will need to have Photoshop downloaded and installed on your computer, to follow this tutorial. Download Photoshop Elements 13 Step 1: Open an image to edit. Choose your photo. Open the photo you want to edit. For this tutorial, I will use a picture I took of a dog crossing the road. I took the photo on my phone. Click the Home tab and use the Move tool to drag and place the image. Make sure the image is cropped to fill the entire canvas. Click on the Placeholder button at the top right of the canvas, as shown below. Click on the New Placeholder button. Step 2: Create a basic colour adjustment. With the image open in the editor, click on the Brush Tool icon in the tool bar. In the Tool Options box, click on the Colour box, as shown below. Select the Blend if you want to apply the adjustment to the entire photo, or the Burn if you only want to change the brightness of the parts of the photo that contain shadows, for example. Adjust the Amount or Lightness slider to darken the picture. Click on the Eyedropper icon to select a colour from the picture. Step 3: Find areas of colour to adjust. With the pixels highlighted, drag the mouse across the image and click when the eyedropper changes colour. Your mouse should now be covered with dots, as shown below. Click the eyes of the eyedropper, located at the top right of the Colour box, to select the colour you want to adjust. As you do this, you will notice the colour of the pixels around the eyedropper change as well. These are the pixels that will get darker or lighter when you lighten the main area. Drag the slider to change the lightness or darkness of the area around the eyedropper. Repeat this until you find an area of colour that you like. In my case, I find that the top right corner will look nice.

Qualcomm picks up pace in China SAN JOSE, Calif. — Qualcomm is pulling ahead in the smartphone market in China, partly because it is the only player here who is a leader in both the processor and networking market, according to its chief executive. What's more, China's mobile companies are growing very fast. The device maker has 98.8 percent of the market share here, according to a report published this month. With the Qualcomm-Motorola deal, Samsung will be the only big vendor in China that doesn't have a processor partner. The deal marks a very significant milestone in Qualcomm's history. It first entered the mobile market in 1999 through a partnership with Motorola to supply chips for Motorola's first cellphone, the Motorola ROKR E1. Motorola went bankrupt in 2002, and was later acquired by Google. With the acquisition, Google will bring all of its devices to market with Qualcomm chips. This move puts Qualcomm in the position of the "third ecosystem," along with the Android system and Apple's iPhone system. The technology giant is slowly improving its position in China, but there's no doubt it faces a difficult road ahead. If it wants to win, it will have to overcome the inherent culture and business environment problems in China. "We are seeing huge growth in China. There is a huge smartphone market now. It's a big market," said Stephen McDowell, Qualcomm's chief executive. But the challenges are growing tougher. China is already the largest market for mobile devices worldwide, yet many of its smartphones are locked-down devices that have fewer and fewer apps and services available to them compared to Android. While there is a rapid growth in smartphones in the Chinese market, there are several ways for them to slow down. For one, China is a huge and diverse market. If the government will make that market more open and friendly to foreign businesses, the growth of smartphones may speed up. China's population of 1.3 billion — more than the rest of the world combined — means many smartphones with different types of operating systems may compete in the market. "The future of phones are really the markets in Asia, where you have a lot of new mobile carriers that are just opening up and the consumers and companies are buying a lot of new phones, putting more smartphones in the market," said McDowell. That means more competition for Qualcomm, which is seeing its market share in China fall. In the second quarter,
