The number of adults who use inhaled medications in the United States continues to increase, with multiple types of inhaled treatments used to treat a variety of respiratory diseases. Given that these medications are inhaled with only breathless delivery and almost always in free-flowing aerosol, nurses in all types of facilities-hospital, long-term care, community, home health-are frequently involved with patients' treatments. An average consumer would find it difficult to accurately determine the performance of an electronic device. For example, a consumer would find it difficult to determine the power usage of the electronic device if it was hard to separate the use of the various components of the electronic device. With additional components, the use of the electronic device could be made more difficult and difficult to utilize. Thus, it would be desirable to provide a consumer friendly monitoring system to measure the use of a device in order to better understand the power usage of the device. Q: How to set the language for a android application? It's possible to set the default language of an application?. For example, my application will be available for multiple languages, i need the default language to be set on my application, if it's possible. A: You can change the text/localisation of your application using the LocaleContext class from the Android API. Android uses the Locale-Context to set the locale for every onCreate() call, so it's a good place to set a default locale. You can even set it at the time of calling the Activity, by using Context.setLocale(): The call this.setLocale(locale) can be made at any point in the course of a user's interaction with your application. It is initially cleared by the factory but can be used to set the initial locale before 1cb139a0ed
