Out of the box, the Opal Collection comes in a box that is the shape of an opal. The box contains the same basic structure of the Lego box. You can open the lid of the box and see two Lego pieces inside. The pieces are molded and not simply printed on the pieces, so they are quite sturdy. The box has an enclosure that will keep the pieces safe during shipping. On the front, you can see that there is a large pane of transparent bricks, with some on the inside of the structure. There are two other transparent bricks on the inside, so it can be a backdrop for your creations. The Opal Collection is an excellent starter set. It comes with 9 pieces and, most importantly, only $8.98! The pieces are molded, so they are durable and will last. This is a great place to start if you are looking for a starter set for a younger child. Some of the pieces are very easy, some are difficult and will require some thought, but it will start him down the path. The set comes with an insert that is used for the instruction booklet. I like the way that the pieces are molded. The entire set is very sturdy and well made. The instructions are very basic. The "ladder" of bricks is pictured at the top of the insert. However, I found it easier to picture what the instructions were describing when the piece was printed on the pieces. For instance, the picture above is of a throne piece and is described on page 17 of the instruction booklet. The instructions are easy to follow. I only had one question about the instructions, which I was able to find the answer to with a little searching. The instructions are written in English and in Danish, so you have a choice. The instructions go through each piece of the set and tells you what it is and how to use it. It explains the construction of the set
