When charges of sexual harassment were levelled against Alberta's Premier Gordon Dirks in 2013 and former cabinet minister Dave Hancock in 2016, many people on both the right and the left presumed that it would be 'safe' to assume they were lying. However, we should remember that it was former Conservative minister Jonathan Denis who received the harshest penalties for the crimes of forcible kissing and groping a female politician in 1987 and, just over a decade ago, it was former Liberal minister Jocelyn Guevremont who was convicted of similar crimes in 1989. In a 2006 academic article entitled 'Anti-quotas and men's studies: double standards and Quebec's Radical-Right', Professor Michel Auger writes that, at the time of the Montreal Massacre in 1989, many Quebec men and women believed that if a Quebec female politician is ever charged with sexual harassment, it will be for engaging in 'non-procreative' sex. One man, who claimed to have been present at the massacre, has said: 'You had to laugh. The majority of the shooters were Quebec men. It was a boys' club. There were women with guns but only men surrounded the leaders and aimed the guns.' What has changed since then? In recent years, university students and professors have filed sexual harassment charges against numerous male campus presidents for the ways in which they allegedly mistreat, harass and use power over women. The John F Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University charged sex guru Dominick Evans with sexual harassment for sexually harassing students. The charges against the former head of the University of British Columbia's gender, women and ethnic studies department came after a 12-year-old student lodged a complaint against him, after he allegedly subjected her to unwanted verbal abuse, racism and worse, and was eventually suspended and fired. As recently as this year, two men filed charges against the president of Concordia University in Quebec City in connection with sexual harassment. Professor Laura Rosen, who was president of the University of British Columbia from 1994 to 2000, had a longstanding career teaching in universities. According to the New York Times, then-lecturer Jason Lee Grant filed a sexual harassment complaint against Rosen, alleging that she had sent him sexually suggestive emails and asked him for a favour which he described as 'sexual harassment'. The New York Times reported that Rosen and other professors found the claims against her to be unbelievable. The suspicion, however, is that these claims have not been taken seriously because they would be
